number and api key, don't forget to change them to match your app id & secret A: U can take help of test application developed by Google As a way to keep track of your friends and even share your profile with them, Facebook has added a new feature called Timeline. Timeline is similar to a newspaper, with a scrolling vertical feed that pulls up all the photos and status updates on your friends' profiles. You can also comment and make choices for where to publish your updates or where to share them with your friends. I took a quick look around the new feature and saw that it still looks pretty much the same as Facebook does today. You can see all of your friends' updated information by scrolling down to their profiles and viewing their updates. A new feature in Timeline is the ability to use it to put together a customized portfolio of your friends. You can view their activities on Facebook and add photos, notes, videos, music and events. At any point, you can decide to keep your friends' activities private and delete everything you've added. Like I said, I've only taken a quick look around Timeline, but I can't say I'm particularly interested in it just yet. [via: The Next Web]We haven't seen anything officially announced, but some early speculation suggests that there are now two iPad mini models in the pipeline. Both models are said to have the same footprint as the current iPad mini, and will pack a 7.85-inch display. Both will use the A7 chip, but a different storage option: one model will pack 16GB of storage, while the other will pack 32GB. Apple does already offer two iPad mini models: the original 9.7-inch iPad mini with 16GB of storage, and the second-generation 9.7-inch iPad mini with 32GB of storage. According to a report in China Economic Times, the smaller iPad mini will be sold in China, while the larger model will be for sale in Europe and the US. Apple has released a refreshed iPad mini with a 9.7-inch display, but there hasn't been an iPad mini with a larger screen for quite some time. While the tablet has proven popular with consumers, its market share 82157476af
